

Summary

On this occasion we concentrated on filling boundary gaps towards the northern end of the western side. There was plenty of freshly (and not so freshly) cut timber in the vicinity to make a reasonable dead hedge along a couple of stretches. A few stems of live wood were coppiced to provide stakes to hold the rest in place. This was always going to be a short work party because of the threat of wet and windy weather from early afternoon, but the rain started shortly after 12.30, so having reached a convenient stage we packed up and avoided a soaking. The usual bag of litter was collected.
